

Inclusion and Diversity

Our school history curriculum has been carefully designed to reflect a diverse range of cultures, civilisations, historical events and significant individuals. Through an inclusive and ambitious approach, pupils develop a broad understanding of the past and how it has shaped the world today.

- The history curriculum ensures pupils study a diverse range of cultures, civilisations, and time periods, promoting a broad and balanced understanding of the world.
- Lessons highlight the contributions and experiences of different groups of people, including those from underrepresented backgrounds, helping pupils recognise diversity in history.
- Pupils are encouraged to explore multiple perspectives and interpretations of historical events, fostering respect for different viewpoints and experiences.
- Teaching promotes inclusivity through accessible resources, scaffolding, and varied learning activities, ensuring all pupils can engage with historical content.
- The curriculum supports British values, including respect and tolerance, by encouraging understanding of different cultures, beliefs, and ways of life across history.

Through the history curriculum, pupils develop an appreciation of the complexity of societies and the experiences of different groups over time. They gain an understanding of how people's actions, perspectives and interactions have shaped significant historical events and continue to influence the world today.
